When asked to describe how he felt about her alma mater, Bernard replied, “The traditions and legacy of East Technical High School was engrained in my upbringing. I was very fortunate to have had two siblings who also happened to be my role models matriculation before me through the old as we referred to the original high school. I was enamored with the tradition and mystic of the basketball program. It became a lightning rod and driving force at a very young age. I was determined to wear the brown and gold, therefore I prepared myself both academically and athletically to uphold the tradition of those who had come before me.

I was blessed to have attended the old school my tenth grade year and live my dream by becoming the starting point guard of the junior varsity basketball squad. I was also fortunate to move across the street to our current school. I remember this being a really big deal for all of us because we ere a part of a every select group of students who could claim for the rest of time that we had experience the old and the new school. We had stood on the shoulder of others and were building bridges for the future...”
